Copperstone recruits the Study Manager to Viscaria

Mining Engineer Ian Holman has been recruited as a consultant to be the responsible Study Manager for the Viscaria Copper Project. In addition, geologist Diane Feve has been employed to the Viscaria office in Kiruna.

"Our recruitment of the Study Manager is a very important milestone towards a re-opening of the Viscaria mine. Ian Holman has all the relevant experience that Copperstone and Viscaria require in order to initiate the Feasibility studies and formalise the Environmental permit application. The initial focus will be to create an Execution plan regarding the Viscaria Scoping Study, including an updated time table and prioritisations for the various sub segments.", comments CEO Michael Mattsson.

The main responsibility regarding Land access and Permits will remain at the CEO and Copperstone Board. Ian Holman will be reporting to the CEO and within specific technical areas to the Technical committee, as defined by the Copperstone Board.

"We would also like to welcome Diane Feve from France currently residing in Kiruna as a junior geologist. Diane will work close to, and report to, project geologist Maurice Zongo."

About Ian Holman
