Logelbach solar power plant is located in the town of Wintzenheim, on the outskirts to the west of Colmar in the Collectivité Européenne d'Alsace. Built on the former Ligibel landfill site, it now offers a sustainable solution for the renewable energy production by making economic and environmental use of this degaged site.

With a capacity of 12.1 megawatts, the Logelbach solar farm covers 12 hectares and has 21,384 solar panels. Annual production is equivalent to the electricity consumption of around 6,000 people. By contributing to France's energy transition and helping to fight global warming, this production will prevent the emission of 2,545 tonnes of CO₂ per year.
