“At TIGO we take tremendous pride in being recognized in the Great Place to Work rankings, solidifying our status as one of the top employers in Latin America,” said Susy Bobenrieth, Millicom EVP, Chief Human Resources Officer. “This recognition shows, once again, our commitment to investing in our people, nurturing our talent, and providing the best possible work environment for everyone. We are taking concrete steps to make sure we are as fair, diverse and equitable as possible.”

Each year the prestigious Great Place to Work Survey recognizes the top companies to work for in each country and the region. The ranking is based on anonymous and rigorous employee surveys, which analyze responses to key elements such as respect, camaraderie, fairness, trust, and pride in belonging to the organization. In Latin America, the Best Workplaces stand out by creating a safe environment, providing two-way communication with leadership, and a genuine sense of caring among colleagues. When companies do all they can to create safe and encouraging workplaces, employees, in return, give the very best they can.
